Conference Overview

The cybersecurity industry has made great strides over recent years and has built up a complex, multi-layered defence architecture. However cyber-attackers are also developing new methods which are penetrating existing security infrastructure and if the cybersecurity industry does not continuously develop and evolve it will not be able to cope with a new generation of threats.

Cyber-attacks are continuing to rise within Europe with several governments and private sector firms being attacked through Malware, DDOS and Trojan Horse attacks. It is essential for the public and private sectors to share information and work together to combat and find the relevant solutions.

There have been several high profile cyber-attacks on critical infrastructure across Europe which demonstrates hackers are finding and will continue to find vulnerabilities in systems with the objective being theft of critical data, financial gain or undermining a company's credibility.

Hosted in London, the Cyber London Conference will provide the ideal platform to bring together companies from a diverse range of sectors and industries to discuss and share the latest information on the challenges and solutions.
